Long after the discovery of electricity, man found out that he could use the great power of water to produce electricity. At first, man used waterfalls from high mountains. Later, he began to build dams across rivers to form a lake behind. The water is then allowed to fall under control through huge pipes to run turbines; machines which help to produce electricity. This runs into wires and is treated before it is used in homes and factories. Dams have also been built along rivers in the world to make full use of the water, so it runs to the driest and least fertile lands to prepare them for farming. Now man uses the sun to produce electricity. Scientists never stop inventing new ways to produce energy which don't pollute the environment. Nowadays, the environment has become the main interest of both the people and the government to live healthy.

In ancient Egypt, like today, most of our important cities were built along the Nile. For this reason, people have used the river for transport for many years. The people also became experts at building boats. In around 4000 BCE, the ancient Egyptians made small boats from papyrus. They used oars to move them forward. Later, they used wood tied together with ropes to build boats. They also invented the first sail in order to move faster up the river when the wind blew.

In around 2500 BCE, people began to build larger and stronger boats. After that, ships were built to travel across the sea to sell goods in other countries. Ships needed the wind until the early 1800s, when the first steamships began to cross the sea. In the twentieth century, oil was used to take powerful ships around the world.
